The Public Schools.

A personal difference between a patron and a principal of one of our public schools seems about to lose its individuality in a general agitation, the result of which in our estimation cannot but be detrimental to the interests of those for whom the benefits of the public schools are specially intended. We say specially intended, because we presume it will not be denied that although the public schools are open to all, the rich and the poor alike, their establishment was primarily for the special benefit of that class of people who were and are unable to secure for their children the benefits of education in any other way, and anything which paralyzes their usefulness or diverts them from the legitimate purpose of imparting to the children of the masses an education practical in character and thorough within its limits, commits an injustice if not a crime against society.

The State of West Virginia, young as she is, has made liberal provision for the education of her children. Regardless of expense, school houses have sprung up all over the State, and that, too, in the face of strong opposition from those who hate free schools as Satan hates holy water. The State has done her duty, and in the provision of the necessary funds there is reason to believe that she will always pursue a liberal policy. Upon those who manage the schools and upon the people themselves now depends the fulfillment of the sphere of usefulness intended and fully provided for.

In the early years of our free school life the State presented a wide field for the operations of profligate authors who in rapid succession went over the State, Aladdin like, exchanging new educational lamps for old ones, differing however from the celebrated Arabian in the manner of exchange, in always requiring the payment of a considerable difference. To such an extent did this state of things prevail that it assumed the proportions of an onerous tax and threatened the exclusion of the children of the poor from the schools from their inability to purchase the required books. It is needless for us to enumerate many other well known causes which have in one way and another militated against the full success of the school system. Some of them arose from the scarcity of experienced teachers and the consequent influx of faddlings from outside states of learning, who in their crudeness imagined that the school system was inaugurated for their benefit, instead of for the benefit of the children who attend the schools. Proper legislation and experience have so tempered these evils that latterly our school system has come to be appreciated as the pearl of great price, and paid by the hand that shall be laid upon it for aught but its perpetuation and improvement.

In our city of Wheeling, above all other places in the State, have been built the most expensive and elaborate temples of education. They are provided with the best and most experienced teachers, and the system of instruction is pushed to the furthest verge of all that can be properly embraced in a common school course. It is a matter upon which there is room for discussion, as to whether we have not rather exceeded the proper limit and extended the sphere of our common schools upward and outward, if not beyond the design of the system at least to the detriment of that thoroughness which should be a distinctive feature of all elementary education.

In the estimation of not a few people of our good city our common schools are overloaded. The State does not design in the common school system to furnish the liberal education of the high grades and colleges, neither does it propose to supplant schools of the fine arts. It proposes only the thorough grounding of the youth in those branches which are practical and form the very corner stone of all true education. For the extended course of our common schools, and the large number in attendance, with the comparatively small number of teachers, a well devised system in the management of the schools becomes an absolute necessity, if the proficiency of the schools is to be commensurate with the reasonable expectations of those who have so amply provided for our educational system. Laws for the regulation of school attendance are eminently proper, and in the modern system of class teaching are indispensable to the progress of the individual scholar as well as the class. Those States longest in the enjoyment of the common school system, and in which it has attained its highest standard of usefulness, have recognized absenteeism as exceedingly deleterious in its effect upon the individual scholar and equally so upon the general progress of the schools. If allowed to prevail to any great extent, it breaks up the general organization of a school, and becomes a source of actual discouragement to teachers, thereby entirely destroying their efficiency.

The proper management of schools may not inaptly be compared to our great railroad system. If a train be delayed for a short time the lost moments may be made up by a slight increase of speed. So, if now and then a scholar miss a lesson or two, he may, by a little application, come up with his class. If, however, one train is delayed frequently and for hours, others must wait, and soon the efficiency of the whole system is broken up. So in school matters the individual scholars must keep up with the classes, or the classes must be retarded to enable the absentees to catch up; or, if the absentees are allowed to remain in their classes there must be great gaps in their course of studies, which must make the knowledge derived of the most superficial character. It needs no great exercise of judgment to perceive that irregular attendance of scholars is utterly destructive of that system which should prevail in the schools in order to secure the highest benefit. For this very reason we find everywhere that stringent rules on the subject of absenteeism have been adopted, and there is no exception made unless for sickness or urgent necessity. In the quite numerous local cities published in the Evening Standard, we note that the highest number of half days allowed to be missed is eight, while generally they do not exceed three or four in one month. These rules have been established upon mature deliberation simply because absenteeism is subversive of all progress and all efficient organization in the schools. In judging of the sufficiency of the reasons for absence considerable latitude has been given to the teachers. The same system of rules, or at least similar ones, prevail in our Wheeling schools for the same reason that they prevail elsewhere, and the simple problem for school authorities to solve in the present or any other difficulty is: Are these rules necessary to promote the best interests of the schools? Are the rules that prevail in our schools so framed as to be equal in their operation upon all scholars in all the schools? Or are they unnecessary and so framed as to their bearing unequal and their enforcement subject to the caprice of teachers or their favorable or unfavorable predilections for certain children, or their parents. If the rules are right, proper and necessary they should have the sanction of the school authorities and the support of public opinion in their enforcement, and there should be no exceptions to their application. If they are arbitrary, unjust or unequal, the evils should be remedied, and if they are useless they should be abolished. Our schools are all, so far as we know, of the common grade, that is we have as yet no high school. The children of the masses are limited as to time, as is shown by the annual report of Superintendent Williams and his explanation of the discrepancy between the number of children of school age and the actual attendance in the schools. The curriculum of the schools is already wide enough and high enough in its range for aggregate sessions of six hours per day. Any addition thereto is not only needless but detrimental to thoroughness in all the departments, leaving out of consideration the fact that additions to the curriculum materially increase the expense of carrying on the schools. From this stand point we cannot see the necessity for compromising any difficulties by adding to the already wide-spread curriculum such other branches as the caprice of scholars or their guardians may suggest. While we have no objection to dancing, we would venture the suggestion that the public schools contemplate the education of the heads of the children and not their heels, and that therefore dancing would hardly form an acceptable basis of compromise, even if compromise were an effective and unobjectionable way of settling school difficulties. In the settlement of school difficulties personal matters should have no place. That which is right in principle and best for the interest of the schools should alone prevail.

Laughlin's Infant Cordial.
The child's cure when teething—to relieve inflammation of the gums, to allay uneasiness, to quiet Colic Pains, to promote sleep, to care for the mother's milk, to soothe the child, and to give the child a healthy and happy life. It is the most valuable remedy to be kept in the family when the children are cutting their teeth. We sell the Cordial in bottles and have heard the first person say it is not all we recommended it to be.

In Chancery.
Pursuant to a decree of the County Court of Ohio county, West Virginia, entered on the 3rd day of September, 1874, in a cause in chancery, I, as Special Commissioner mentioned in said decree, will sell at public auction at the front door of the Court House of Ohio county, on THURSDAY, the 19th day of November, 1874, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., the following described real estate situate in said Ohio county, to-wit: Tract No. 1, being a piece of land in the town of Island, in Daniel Zane's add'l tax to the city of Wheeling, fronting 25 feet on York street and running back 181 feet to Hart's alley, with the two story frame house thereon.
Tract No. 2, being a piece of ground adjoining tract No. 1, on the east side of York street, with the improvements thereon, said tract No. 1 and 2 to be sold either together or separate.
Tract No. 3, being a farm on the east side of Chapline hill road, about one mile east of the city of Wheeling, adjoining lands belonging to the estate of Daniel Stearns and Z. Jacob, containing one hundred and three acres more or less, divided into lots to suit purchasers, consisting in all of nine lots, varying in size from two to twenty-two acres, each having an outlet to said York street, said tract No. 3, which contains 13 acres, 33 poles, and fronts on said road, there is a commodious dwelling house and conveniences thereon. Said lots will be sold separately or any two or more of them together, or the lot of any of them what is usually called the city of Wheeling, said tract No. 3, with its subdivisions, and the improvements thereon, to be sold at public auction, and a plat of survey of the same at the Clerk's office of Ohio county Court.
All coal and other minerals in and under tract No. 3, except the upper veins of coal nearest the top of the hill, and what is usually called the city of Wheeling, said tract No. 3, with its subdivisions, and the improvements thereon, to be sold at public auction, and a plat of survey of the same at the Clerk's office of Ohio county Court.
Money and as much more as the purchaser may desire in cash, and the remainder in three equal annual payments, with interest from the day of sale, the purchaser giving bond with approved security for the deferred installments, and the title to be retained until the payment of the purchase money is full.
Special Commissioner,
